Extortion

That Alex Bergdahl pursues a criminal extortion is familiar to the pattern of development when we find consistency of intent. The pursuit of control is common to addiction and desperation. The conclusion to intent to project power over others is evident in gaming. A consistency to induction is plainly available. The suggestions of sex are unmistakable.

As a pursuit of control becomes apparent and unavoidable, criminality replaces insanity as the preferred hypothesis of behavioral explication.

The comedy of errors suggests that I am isolated and vulnerable to his criminally insane advances. That argument and debate will confuse and confound any available observation. And that the construction of such “scrambled eggs” is intentional and criminal.

Unfortunately for Alex Bergdahl, that “raisin bread” ■ has been baked on the stone.
