Junkie

The confusion and exhaustion of other, group, and society is a practical convenience to aggression, abuse, injury, and destruction. The novelty that distinguishes the junkie from other classes of criminal is the fantasy, delusion, and self destruction. A normal criminal has a higher priority for self preservation and interest.

In the Bergdahl case, the displays of hyper – objectification become plain with experience to handle the violence. Therefore this falls into my theory of developmental psychology under the rubric of a nihilistic crisis. In this case the term represents
