Horizons

If we allow our avatar to lift us into abstraction, we might imagine balancing on air above the trees to see the horizon in every direction.

We should not be surprised to see absurdity or inanity because they are common. And we should not be surprised by an occasional rarity of sense or reason because understanding is always in proportion to effort.

One is often dependent on the future of awareness. On the will to endure the exercise that reveals the experience that leads to the awareness that affords understanding. Time is always in favor of awareness.
